Dysart complementary therapist

Healing arts programme

New course for mind, body and soul ...

A DYSART complementary therapist is setting up her own private training school! Mariette Lobo, who has over 15 years experience teaching in the industry, is a private training provider for complementary therapies in the Kirkcaldy area and she is looking for students to sign up to her new courses starting in January 2013.

She will be launching awareness courses as well as a new practitioner diploma course.

The Healing Arts programme, will run in the evenings and weekends, lasts 10-12 weeks and allows people to have a taste of what complementary therapy is all about.

Mariette, who also runs her own private clinic, said the practitioner diploma courses take a year to complete and the first therapy course on the programme is reflexology.

She said: "This is a unique and welcome approach in the Fife area.

"People don't have to give up their day jobs to do this. They can continue to earn their living and learn about complementary therapies at weekends.

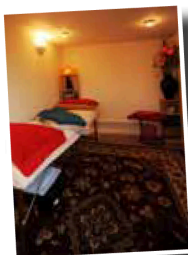

The diploma will be taught over one intensive weekend a month and there will be online tutorial support available in between sessions.

"The classes will be small with a maximum of four students so each can have individual attention during the training."

It is a gold standard course taught by Mariette who also received a commended Tutor of the Year Award from the Federation of Holistic Therapists (FHT) in their Excellence in Education Awards category.

The internationally-recognised qualifications are awarded by the Vocational Training Charitable Trust (VTCT) which is one of the leading awarding bodies for complementary therapies.
